Sales Commissions are calculated and paid based on a proportion of the amount day of or value of the goods or services sold. California law requires that sales commission arrangements must be spelled out in a written agreement signed by the sales commissions must also be paid timely. If you are owed sales commissions, our employment lawyers may be able to help you get paid. We have offices in Los Angeles and San Francisco. For details about our Los Angeles office, click here. For details about our San Francisco office, click here. Please contact us today to get started. What Does Timely Mean? Under California Labor Code §204, timely payment means sales commissions earned must be paid at least twice per calendar month on the days designated in advance by the employer as paydays. If sales commissions were earned between the 15th and 26th day of the month, then payment must be made from the 16th through the last day of the month, payment must be made between the 15th and 26th day of the following month.California law makes an exception to the twice-a-month payment rule for vehicle dealers. DMV-licensed vehicle dealers may pay sales commissions just once each calendar month on a day designated by the dealers. Code, the particular terms of any commissioned sales arrangement should be outlined in a Sales Commission or Employment Agreement will be enforced by courts. Generally speaking, any terms that are against California law or public policy, or that are substantively unconscionable (so unfair as to shock the conscience of a reasonable person), will not be enforced and will be considered void. Is a Sales Commission Agreement Required? Yes, California Labor Code §2751 requires that compensation based on a commission structure must be set forth in a written agreement. In addition, the employer must give a copy of the agreement to the employee and may require the employee to sign a receipt for it. What Does a Sales Commission Agreement must include a clear description of the method by which commissions will be computed and paid. Furthermore, sales commission agreements must contain clear descriptions of any amounts the employer plans to deduct from earned commissions. You should be able to understand from the agreement exactly what you will be paid for your work and when your right to payment will accrue. If an agreement exactly what you will be paid for your work and when your right to payment exactly what you will be paid for your work and when your right to payment will accrue. If an agreement expires, but the employee continues to work for the employer, the terms of the expired contract are deemed to continue in full force until a new agreement is signed or until the employment relationship is terminated. If the employee are not ultimately earned as a commission. Because the law requires that commission arrangements must be in writing, if the agreement is silent about repayment, amounts paid in advance will be treated by courts as general wages in the event of a dispute. What can the Employer Deduct from Commissions? Employers are prohibited from deducting their own costs of doing business from sales commissions that have been earned unless they can establish that there was a loss caused by a dishonest or willful act of the employee, or by the culpable negligence of the employees may, however, deduct certain costs related to the sale that gave rise to the commission - for example, free shipping or free products offered to induce the sale. In a retail environment, employers may deduct from future commissions amounts for past commissions paid on merchandise that has subsequently been returned was originally sold by the same employee. Hudgins v. Neiman Marcus (1995) 34 Cal.App.4th 1109.Anything the employer plans to deduct must be clearly described in the written agreement. If it is not mentioned in the agreement. If it is not mentioned in the written agreement. If it is not mentioned in the agreement, the employer plans to deduct it. Davis v. Farmers Ins. Exchange (2016) 245 Cal.App.4th 1302, 1333.Outside SalesCalifornia law distinguishes between "outside" sales and "inside" sales. Outside salespersons are exempt under California Labor Code §1171 from minimum wage and overtime requirements. An outside salesperson is defined as someone who spends more than half their work time away from the employer's place of business "selling tangible or intangible items or obtaining orders or contracts for products, services or use of facilities." If your employer has you classified as "outside sales" but you don't think your duties fit this definition, you may wish to speak with one of our attorneys. Misclassification of an employee as an outside salesperson is one way in which some employers may try to evade their obligations to pay minimum wage and overtime. Can the Employer Make Changes to the Sales Commission Structure or Agreement? An employee to enter into a new or revised agreement to the new terms. However, employees may not, in this way, avoid paying commissions already earned under a previous agreement. Once a commission has been earned based on the old agreement's terms, it must be paid. What if There is no written agreement covering your employment or expressly stating that such payments are considered loans against commissions yet to be earned, then courts will consider such payments as wages earned for the period. Employees' wages unless they are otherwise required or empowered by state or federal law to do so. If you perform "commissioned" sales work without a written agreement but do not make any actual sales or earn any commissions, you are still entitled to some compensation for your work since all California employees paid by commission is a violation of California's labor code. If an employer's failure to comply with California labor laws is found to be willful, they could be required to pay additional penalties, including attorney's fees in some cases. What if I am Fired or Leave While Sales Commissions are Pending? Whether or not you are entitled to be paid pending sales commissions when you quit, or if you get fired, may depend on the specific terms of your sales commission agreement. If there is no agreement, however, or if the agreement does not describe and set terms for this kind of circumstance, then courts would be more likely to find that you must be paid for any commissions earned or pending at the time you left. It is well established that California public policy favors the protection of employees, and they may not transfer the financial burden of their employees and risks to their employees. What if I Close a Deal but the Company Changes the Terms of the Deal Such That it Results in a Lower Commission for Me?Again, this likely depends on the specific terms of your written agreement and the specific terms of your written agreement beyond your control, you may still be entitled to the full commission. Even if the changes made to the deal were of a type specifically contemplated, with clear provisos in your agreement allowing the employer to reduce your commission in those cases, there could still be circumstances under which it would be considered improper for an employer to reduce your commission. If you are concerned that your employer has not paid you sales commissions, our attorneys in Los Angeles and San Francisco may be able to help. Schedule a free consultation here.
